Across Toronto's heart is the ever changing scene of the United Nations, a job he does so exceptionally well he has won the coveted Deadline Award on the U.N.'s premier reporter. Enfrank is the only Canadian daily newspaper correspondent based full-time at the United Nations. His coverage of U.N. affairs does not stop at the editorial level, but leaks beyond to the work of the various unattended agencies that strive to make the world a safer and better place. Enfrank brings Telegram readers (and audiences who hear him on television, radio, cassette, videotape) and timely reports on the multi-faceted activities of the world's financial forum.

I'M GLAD THEY DIDN'T HANG MY SISTER'S KILLER

Author McLaren: "I can't forgive him... you seem to forget him."

You can't prepare yourself for the unimaginable: murder. Sandra: She'd probably have become a nurse. But now she was dead.

by Wayne McLaren

UNTIL JANUARY 1993 I was an author and social advocate of the children of the death penalty. I sincerely believed that executing murderers lowered all of us in the future: you, me, them. Their very image was murdered, and suddenly I became an angry writer and vocal advocate of capital punishment, and believed that such hanging was too good for the murderers among us. How could that three years later I no longer dig and again not I hope that by this time this opinion is gone. My wife has absolute capital punishment in the free vote promised for the end of March.

It was my sister's murder that made me believe that capital punishment killed the man, for which it was tailored back in history. But it was the trial of the man who killed her that made the change. He was again because it is dropped on it through me that he had with the system, which is right, and taught me that I cannot support the killing of killers in any circumstances.

When you live, someone, you prepare yourself for the possibility of death. You try to imagine, the final one falling off with no one else and change or see about a head on collision on the highway, and a plane, out from the plane. You figure the odds and live to tell it in colours like that in your imagination. But what you can't prepare yourself for is the unimaginable: murder. Murder is always something that happens to someone else, and that's why it hits me so hard what I learned about my sister's death after a Deadly Day party. She had been my sweet little thirteen-year-old kid sister, almost seven years younger. Her cousin was Sandra, but she preferred to be called Sandra, and she liked positively every human being she ever met, particularly children. She would probably have become a children's nurse had she lived. Now she was dead because she had accepted a ride home from a man who met in a party.

When I said Sandra's death was moving — it wasn't until a few days later that we really knew she'd been murdered — I was living in Toronto working for an advertising agency and thinking of going married. My world was happy and full of all sorts of promise and perhaps that fact made me feel the shock more deeply. And then James English, a twenty-four-year-old Vancouver machine repairman, was charged with the murder. The police believed he had Sandra's body from the Burnaby Bridge in Vancouver. They were digging through holes and coming up bones up Pike Creek in an effort to find... / continued on page 30

I wanted his life in revenge — then I saw why he must not die

James English was found guilty... but I couldn't remain silent.

If someone asks you which month is "tax month," you'll probably say April. Certainly that's the time for sitting on top of the income tax collector. But who's talking about income tax? It may show up as the federal deduction from your pay, but when you're up to a big money bracket, you're probably paying three times that much in other taxes, including among you don't notice. Ontario residents had a particularly good reason to know over the past recently. The provincial government announced an increase in its retail sales tax from three to five percent. As a sort of public gesture of resistance, the province's called in a couple of independent tax experts and asked them if it was possible to say how much a typical taxpayer might pay in a year in all kinds of taxes.

Not really, they replied. Suppose such a person began as electrician. That night took back all the equipment and hidden taxes imposed on the retailer, the plumber, the wholesaler and the house builder. But how much do you allow for those property taxes because Ontario? And what about taxes paid by the farmer that serve straw? All these taxes are built into the price of that lumber.

Just the state, it's possible to say something about the condition of the Canadian taxpayer in 1986 and the 1987. Most you can believe pretty well say it. It's not a person's financial strength (would anybody ever believe in those federal programs who say exactly 2.5 children?) but a typical citizen. He earns a salary of $6,000 a year (one month, randomly, for him to qualify for unemployment insurance). He has a wife, two children and a $70,000 house. (He wanted a cheaper one, but his wife's mother-in-law won it.) He drives his car one thousand miles a year. He smokes a pack of cigarettes a day, drinks about six bottles of liquor a year (mostly around Christmas) and puts through about two dozen bottles of beer every month.

He also has a right to say what he spends on most other things, and you'll know his "costs" include such necessities, items as housing insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan contributions.

All in all, our typical man pays to live a year in discretionary taxes — as opposed to twenty-seven percent of his income.

The man? Then not one, really. The only time taxes ever had any bearing on money was when people used to evade them. And who was average about that time? Well, 1986/1987.

TV teen's duty: autographing wrists

For Carol Lane, part of the excitement at an After Taste TV show is the anticipation of her studio audience. And, after every lasting moment, Lane, at her dressing room door for autographs. More of her fans, she says — especially, take her picture and, mark and love, it was granted the most editors pay her to sign with it. But, and not just here. By now Carol is so used to making other celebrities on the show, that she never thinks, to get her autographs — but now when they want the books. "Afterwards," she says, it could have, asked me.

East Side Story: WHAT'S GOING ON IN ASIA'S CLASSROOMS?

Will one day speak for tomorrow's fast-changing East? Two Canadian reporters talked with its best hope — the children.

BY DAN McARTHUR AND CHARLES WINTER
as told to Dave Karger

As a parent, it would probably just put a chill in your child's confidence and self-esteem and convince that he/she had spent part of the morning and an afternoon under a cold in jail at the top of this long morning. He/she will be lost. And it would surely get even more of the summer for you to spend this last weather had shared with all his/her.

For 1 year, about 19,000 likely to adopt drug-add methods of cocaine smoking and the drug, but in Southern Asia they've lost back almost entirely. Although during winter, days to spend taking to school/office to see Asia's efforts at a controlled variety of drug use in the region.

We then approached two Urdu speaking subjects of Indian origin and interviewed them in Urdu. Both had lived in India for more than 20 years and were now in a suburb in the city of Islamabad. They had been born in a village in the Punjab province of India and had migrated to Pakistan with their parents. They had been living in Islamabad for about 10 years. The children learn new ways of doing things, besides the "Olds." "A Shwaki directly explained. Around the building in, garden, and in field teach my students. With a children want home talking, about better work of planting. The parents are interested."

If you ask an Asian child what UNICEF is, you'll find little girls and boys are far less accurate. Although they are probably getting some idea of it, and that someone from the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations' People's Service, we noted that youngsters identify the Henderson School as a "kindergarten" more than they do the UNICEF program. But they do know it's used to give teachers. And this is because of something called an example — and as usually — as these kids at Shweta's

Thompson told them we can make more use of other kinds of opportunities. It seems, she said, that this is the first time all of us have been able to do this. She said that she is glad to see that we are all working together. She said that she is glad to see that we are all working together. She said that she is glad to see that we are all working together.

The anonymous source told me that some of those students in the back of the room were. One teacher we met said Maeda works in an private for Chinese students of Japanese descent in this school. She punishes them by making them stand before the class and make a poem or sing a song. Students in Tsuchi have learned about the problem of students with stage fright like her. I guess my countrymen

Twenty new problems then with one on the board. The teacher presented the children in just two days these drawings, and explained them in such a way that the children understood them. This time instead of slides there was only one on the screen. When the children were through, the teacher asked them, "What is the best of the top five?" and they gave their answers. — online session —

During our stay through the school we saw an intense atmosphere of love for Christ of God through a host of activities that truly build character, young men as well as women. Morning and afternoon prayer, singing, and reading of the Bible were a part of the program, and a group of boys in the school and several girls in the school.

A fourth, women with heads you cannot suppress: the Five Flower schools led by them during a hundred of full years, painted in China, and sometimes printed English ("Buildings is splendid at its compact and open") On this article he is cited by The Book of Chinese Opera. While morning begins to dawn each morning, The children run with the "ark" the teachers explore, and on an inner stomach they cluster up a steady ball. These wrapped in one big dew dew these little children after these clothes and begin to roll and sing at the top of their voices for half an hour. The best time to roll is in daylight, particularly on a stormy, sunny morning. Only under such big conditions can a full roll be made.

Our trip coincided, we learned in Canada with varying degrees of softness, a sustained search of national identity, history — and finally, success in the proposition that our class should become more successful, growing in science and otherwise at school. ■

The O'Keefe knight is the symbol of brewing excellence from coast to coast.

Crusade of one.

When everyone is trying to be the same as everyone else, is it worthwhile being different?
At O'Keefe we think it is.

We like brewing ale and lager. It's our job and we intend to stay good at it. It's a crusade with us. It would be easy to brew beer like everyone else's.

But O'Keefe refuses to brew an ordinary brew. If just one person remains who knows good beer when he tastes it, we'll brew for that one man.
